There is a small parking area at the beginning of the easement. The easement is not accessible to vehicular traffic.

Ephraim Hunt Ministerial Land

The Ephraim Hunt Land is 63.5-acres and consists of sandy upland pitch-pine forest and wooded wetlands bisected by two streams. It provides habitat for the wood turtle, a Massachusetts listed species of special concern and is situated over a high yield aquifer. It also contains a sinuous ridge of gravelly outwash, known as an esker. The Ephraim Hunt Ministerial Land can be accessed by a small parking area located on Pond Street. Several trails wind through the property.

The land is owned by the Rehoboth Land Trust with a conservation restriction held by the Rehoboth Conservation Commission. The funding was a cooperative effort between the Rehoboth Land Trust, the Rehoboth Conservation Commission, Massachusetts Executive Office of Energy and Environmental Affairs, and The Trustees of Reservations.
